Philippines President Rodrigo Duterte has said the country should negotiate with Russian President Vladimir Putin rather than wait for President-elect Donald Trump to get to work. Mr Putin has “made statements to the press that he might even tolerate us returning to the Philippines,” Mr Duterte said in a speech on Monday. “Why don’t we [try to]?” he said. “Why don’t we tell President-elect Trump that we are your neighbour and would like to talk to you to address any issue that we are having with respect to the situation in the West Philippine Sea [or South China Sea]. “And Putin, for all I know, he might understand that it’s more in our interests [to negotiate with him] than President Trump.” Mr Putin is expected to attend a regional summit in Manila this weekend, as well as a meeting in Laos on Friday with Mr Trump. “We’ve had too many meetings. We’re not going to resolve anything. We need to negotiate. We cannot meet in a box,” Mr Duterte said. “I am not afraid of even Putin. I’m not afraid of Hitler either. But if you're not strong you will go down. That is my message to President Trump. You tell him to be strong." Mr Duterte's remarks came after a Wall Street Journal columnist said Mr Trump will work to improve relations with Russia, saying he had "serious doubts" about the US President-elect's commitment to ending the ongoing territorial conflict in the South China Sea. China claims almost all of the strategically vital South China Sea, which is believed to hold substantial deposits of oil and gas, and restricts freedom of navigation of foreign fleets in waters claimed by Taiwan, the Philippines, Vietnam, Malaysia and Brunei. The Association of Southeast Asian Nations has for years hoped for a negotiated solution to the territorial dispute, though both sides have been reluctant to give ground. During the campaign, Mr Trump suggested that the US military should be given a wider mandate to deal with the conflict, telling supporters: “We have to knock out these ISIS bastards”. The US-based Washington Post columnist said the President-elect had “serious doubts” about the US President's commitment to ending the territorial conflict in the South China Sea
